

This regulatory item which is underway at the Federal Communications Commission could badly damage independent ISPs, the very companies which built the Internet itself should not be wiped away and replaced by the large telephone monopolies. If you don't the ISP's would have to individually negotiate pricing and the ability to interconnect, which would undoubtedly raise my prices. The more serious threat is that it is even possible that the phone companies could, in the long run, refuse to provide the necessary connections for my DSL service, and my provider would not be unable to sell DSL at all. And, the companies which built the Internet itself should not be wiped away and replaced by the large telephone monopolies. Stop trying to regulate broadband service.
